The dwelling house of Eben S. Woodward was struck by lightning on the eve of Saturday, Aug. 28. It struck the chimney and ran down into the house, doing considerable damage. Some of the members of the family were in the room visited by the unwelcome guest, but received no serious injury. Mr. Woodward's son, George J., seventeen years of age, has just bought a fine harness of Charlie Graves, harness maker, with the money he has saved out of his spending money in the last three years. His father promised to purchase him a fine buggy when 21 years old, if he would save of his pin money enough in three years to buy a silver plated harness, which he has done. Most boys waste money enough before they are of age to purchase a whole team.

It will be seen by reference to "Notices" that the county shire question in this county is liable to be agitated in the coming legislature, that there is a desire on the part of somebody to annex a portion of Morgan to Derby, also the whole or a part of Salem to Derby. There is a notice for the creation of a new county, making South Hardwick a county center. This would require a town or two from this county, a portion of Caledonia, and parts of other counties. It will be well for those who are to be affected by these changes to see that they are well represented in the legislature. We had supposed from conversation with several interested that there would be no stir this fall on the "county building" question, and there may be none, notwithstanding the notice. This county will not care to lose its good towns of Craftsbury and Greensboro.

On Tuesday evening O. S. Dorman addressed the democracy. Mr. Dorman undertook to show what great good would result to this community with Hancock for President and Currier for member of Congress. On Wednesday evening D. E. GO SLOW! No brave soldier would clutch the laurels which justly belong to another. According to present Democratic claims, General Hancock was the only officer that amounted to much in the battle of Gettysburg. The history of the battle shows that the great superiority of his service is a matter of quite recent creation. While all extolled him as having contributed essentially to the gaining of the victory, no one ever claimed that his contribution had been any more important than that of any one of the other corps commanders-Reynolds, Doubleday, Howard, Schurz, Slocum, Sickles, Sykes and Sedgwick. To be sure, he had repelled a desperate assault on his front, but so also had each of the others. His corps had done its duty, and did it well: but no better than each of the others. It had wavered under the fierce assault of McLaws' and Anderson's divisions, and it required the timely assistance of the Sixth corps to drive but so also had Generals Sickles, Barlow, Graham, Warren, Gibbon, Paul and Zook, and General Reynolds had been killed. The friends of General Hancock must either moderate their claims as to his exclusive agency in obtaining this great victory, or encounter just denunciations from those whose laurels they would steal to decorate him. Tread lightly, gentlemen; you are upon sacred ground !- Watchman

Candidate Phelps, whom the Vermont democrats are supporting for Governor, made a speech in 1864, while the Government was striving to put down the rebellion, in which he characterized Abraham Lincoln as "a twentieth rate back-county attorney, without one single qualification for a statesman, not one. not one." In this speech he referred to the men who had opposed slavery as "a Potatoes, Jackson set of long-haired, miserable creatures,' denounced the advisers of the President -"Charles Sumner and Horace Greeley and Henry Ward Beecher and all that class of miscreants," as "scoundrels that had got possession of the administration:" and alluded to Abraham Lincoln as "that wooden head that you have got for President." He had no word of condemnation for any rebel, a great mistake, and it is apparent all through that he was in hearty sympathy with what Wade Hampton describes as "the principles for which Lee and Jackson fought;" and that it needed no change of sentiment to bring him into line as the ally of Wade Hampton and the Rebel Brigadiers .- Boston Traveller

We of the south feel that she is leader. She has taught us that the path of duty is the path of glory [applause] and I have come here now to adjure you by the glories of the past, by the hopes of the future, to lead us again as you have led us in the past, not always to victory, but always to honor. [Applause] Many of the dearest ties bind me to Virginia: one that which binds comrades in arms. [Cheers.] You know, fellow soldiers, how strong that is Applause. You feel that every soldier who stood by you is your friend; and you, Virginians, should know that every soldier, no matter where from, who stood by you, is jealous of the fame and honor of Virginia, and feels a personal interest in the memories of Lee and Jackson. Pause before you cast your vote. Think how Lee would have voted. Think what Jackson would have done before he would have cast a vote calculated to divide his beloved Virginia. I ask you to remember that the principles they died for are again on trial to-day .-From Wade Hampton's speech as reported in the Staunton Vindicator (Dem.)

I am as positive that Hancock will be elected as I am that there is a God in the heavens. You say that he is a Yankee. Well, I know that; and I know, too, that his sword has pierced the breast of many a gallant man in gray. But what are we to do? We cannot put in one of our own men this time, and have to take a 'Yank.' That being the case, let us take one who is less 'blue-bellied' than the most of them. You may depend upon it, sir, that 'Yank' or no 'Yank,' if elected, the old boys of the south will see that Hancock does the fair thing by them. In other words, he will run the machine to suit them, or they will run the thing themselves. They are not going to be played with any longer. If you hear any man say that Hancock cannot carry all of the south you may put him down as a dfool.-Robert Toombs to a Friend in Washington.
